Q&A

Business cases and long-term projects are commitment to deliver a set of predefined outputs.

By nature, this doesn't deal well with uncertainty, disruption or rapid change.

Two Success Stories

Facebook's Advertising Revenue ($m)¹ Mobile continues to surge

Google's Net Search Advertising Revenue in the U.S. ($b)² Google's shifting landscape

Purpose

“Cash in a business is like fuel in a car. It has to be there, but a road trip is not a tour of gas stations.”

~ Tim O'Reilly

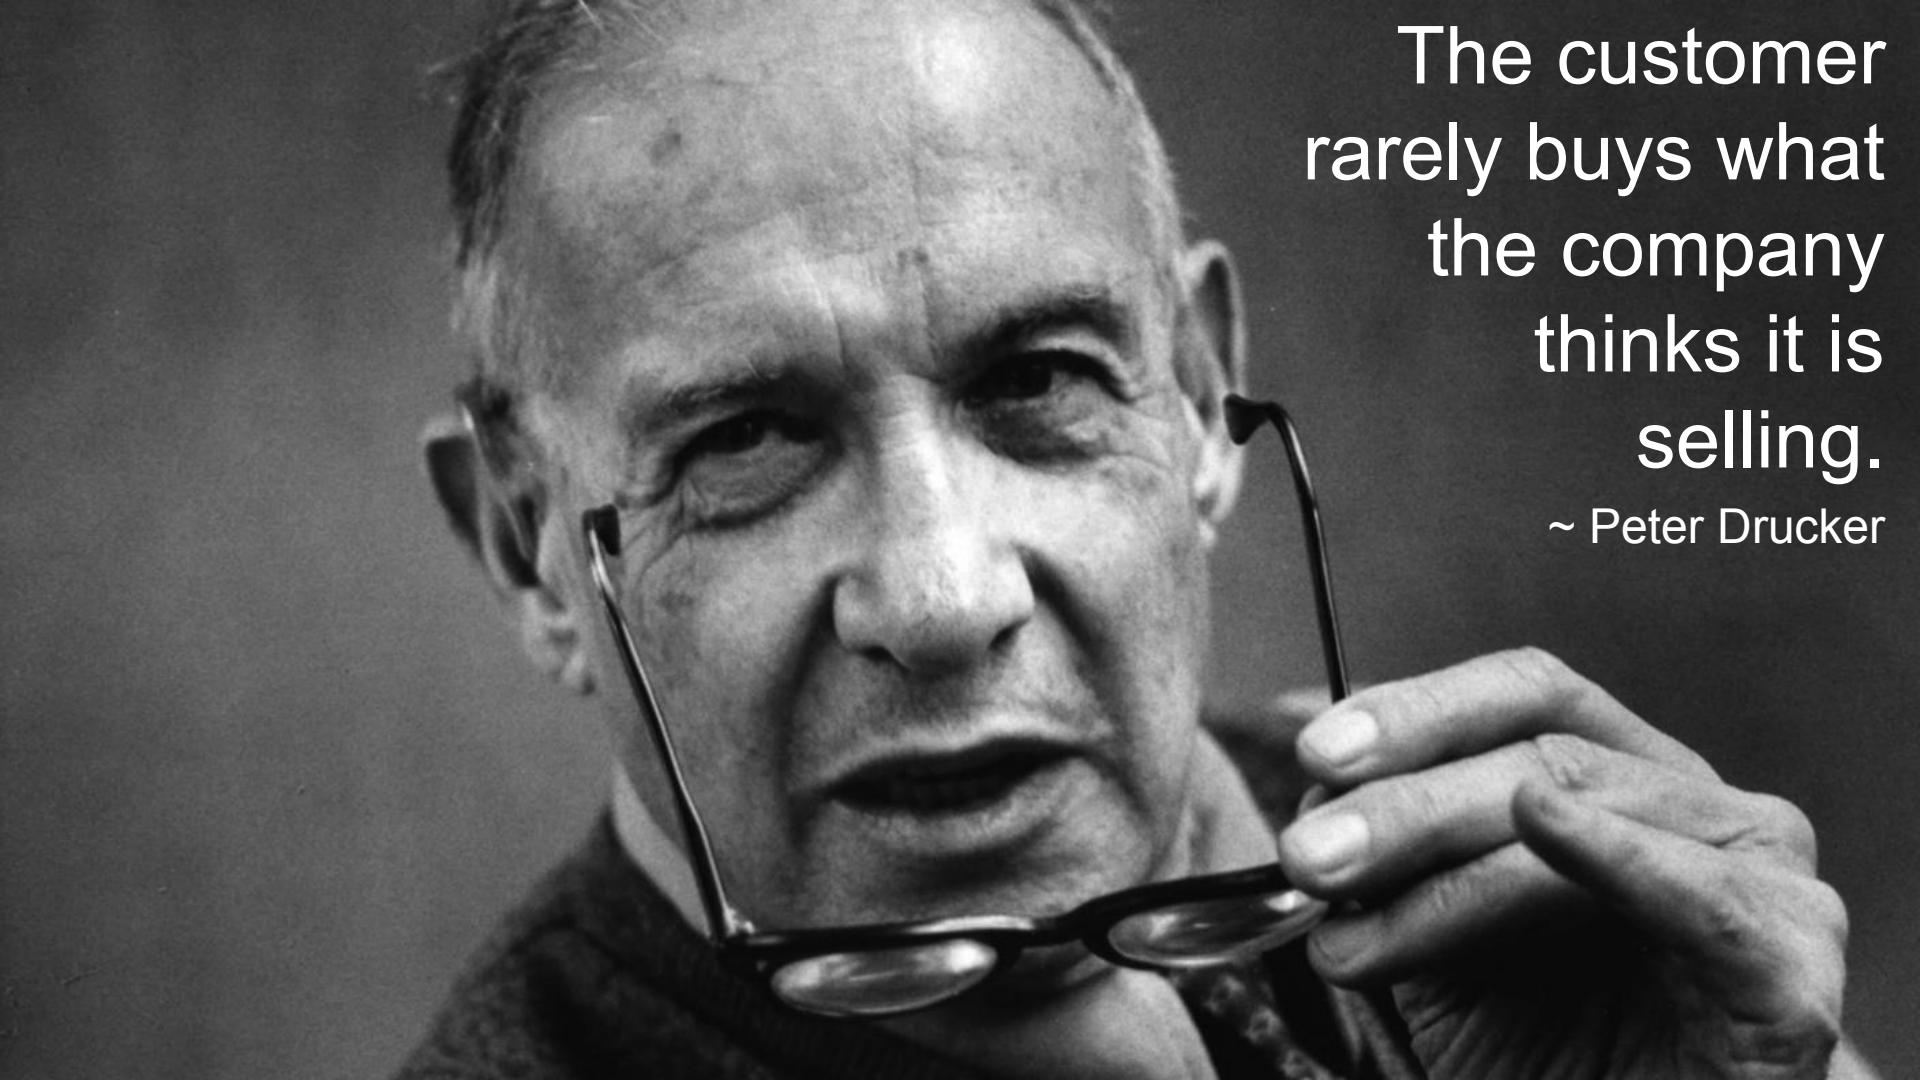

Understand the job you do

People don't want to buy a quarter-inch drill, they want a quarter-inch hole.

~ Theodore Levitt (US economist)

The customer rarely buys what the company thinks it is selling.

~ Peter Drucker

Our use of Agile

Most of our Digital dev teams are using Scrum, with some Kanban.

Most of the rest of the organisation has not moved to Agile yet.

Our rollout plans to take the rest of the org Agile (focused on proximity to Digital).

Our use of Agile

We're changing our processes to incentivise our staff to experiment and embrace Agile

Our use of Agile

Our Agile teams follow the 7+/-2

Product owners typically in businesses.

Legacy roles and processes still exist.

We opted for a gradual rollout.

Challenges

Existing projects, platform replacements.

“Big Bang” / Launch-sponsored projects.

We are a very large, very old business.

Many acquisitions has led to many silos.

Q&A

Disruptors are coming.
Watch for them at the bottom of your market

Textbook management best-practices alone will set you up perfectly to be disrupted

The background of the image shows a close-up, slightly blurred view of a desk. Several yellow sticky notes and white papers are scattered across the surface. Some of the papers have faint, illegible handwriting or diagrams. The lighting is soft, creating a professional and creative atmosphere.

Agile development is not enough.
You need Agile
product management
